

For my logo, I wanted to include something about my major and or minor in it because when I think of things about myself, those are the first things I think of. I couldn't think of anything that could look good as a logo that involved these things that worked with what we have done in class or that I just thought looked good. Instead, I took one thing about my major, film, and used it to show things about myself. In film, color theory is used a lot. Each color has its own feeling and emotion and meaning, so I took colors that explain things about myself. Purple has been my favorite color since I was little, and I find comfort in the color. In color theory purple can be used for wisdom and bravery. I like to learn as much as I can that can help me with life and help me be more knowledgeable. I wouldn't say I am too brave, but I would like to be, so purple can be a symbol of bravery for me, a symbol to remind me to take risks. Green can be used to symbolize growth. I am growing every day in every way and will continue to until I die, and I think that's a cool thing. I like that I am growing every day as a person and am grateful for it. Lastly, yellow is a symbol for optimism and joy. I always try to think positively about situations rather than being pessimistic, because I know in the end things will be okay. As for the joy portion, a motto that I remind myself of and that I go by is that if I am doing things that bring me happiness then nothing else matters. I value happiness over anything really. I put these colors into a borromean ring that we have discussed in class. I chose this specific knot or symbol because I like that the three rings are all intertwined, making them all connected. For my logo I like that all three of these colors that help describe me are all connected. I put blocks in them to add something more to it visually, but also because I like things to be equal and symmetric.
